

Chloe Strand

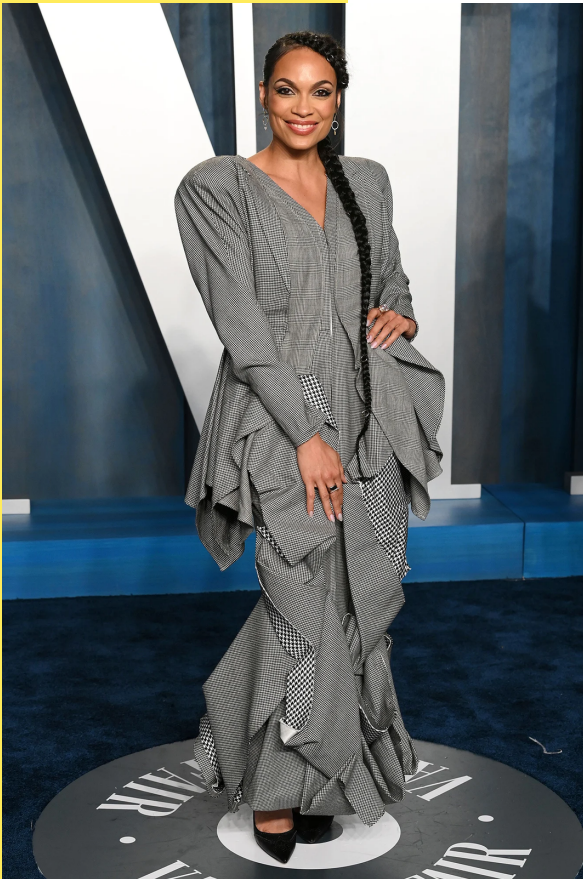

SKIES OF GRAY

bodycon gowns

STORM THE OSCARS

choosing our star

Actresses Hunter Schafer and Rosario Dawson light up the night by bringing life back into the muted tones displayed at the Vanity Fair after party.

Dripping in designer pieces and jewels, our favorite A listers are ready for the runway, once more.. Throughout their careers they have dazzled us on countless red carpets and screens. March 27 of 2022 the 94th annual Academy Awards were held to celebrate these A listers by presenting the Oscars. Channeling the energy of New York, the city that never sleeps, the Dolby Theatre in Los Angeles housed the awards where the afterparty hosted by Vanity Fair went well into the evening.

Hunter Schafer for Rick Owens

Hunter Schafer stuns in 50 shades of gray, with a silhouette that could only belong to Rick Owens. In a multi wash denim gown, the Euphoria star wears the signature cut from her collarbone to the floor. With a bodycon fitting, this sleek look falls towards the fingertips with a raw hem that cohesively pairs with a matching slashed train. Are we obsessed with the sophisticated glow Schafer is delivering? Absolutely. This look isn't too young or frilly, it delivers us the maturity the Oscars call for.

Rosario Dawson for Thom Brown

The phrase "less is more," takes to light here. While we are fans of Rosario Dawson in more ways than one, her gown consumed her versus accentuating her own features. Here at Grazia we are having flashbacks from the eighties by the football ready shoulder pads and a loosely tapered sleeve. A shredded office look emerges as houndstooth and minuscule black and white checkers hang from the A line skirt. Dawson has our hearts, but not our style.